NOBILITY OF AMERICAN RED CROSS WORKERS

THERE is grave danger that the sensibilities of the race will become blunted as a result of the war. Yesterday a mass of news and comment relating to the war was perused by the writer and after a time the most harrowing details became easy reading, something like Sanford and Merton or the Congressional Record. In other words, the mental effort required grew less and less and drowsiness drew on and on. There was reduced response to the fervid imaginings and stiletto-out picturings by those who told of the world's greatest tragedy, the crime of all the centuries.

But there was one narrative that in its simplicity of words and in its unadorned phraseology held the reader and caused the brief sketch to be re-perused. It was the experience of the first unit of the American Red Cross to enter Serbia after the typhus scourge had brought its loathsome presence into the war hospitals of that unhappy land. Let the words of Rev. Loyal T. Wirt in the Boston Congregationalist be reprinted to evidence that there is nobility as well as brutality acting as a force in the world today:

"They found 1,400 desperately sick and wounded men—Serbian soldiers and Austrian prisoners. These had been carried to two dirty tobacco warehouses: 150 of them were lying on mattresses (two and three to a mattress). The rest were on the reeking floor—1,400 men in stoic silence, suffering from gunshot wounds, shrapnel, and bursting shell. Many were without portions of their bodies; all wounds were infected, not having been dressed since the first rough aid on the battlefield days since. But this was not the worst. Lying in filth, unmattressed and half-starved, germs of the most deadly epidemics were appearing—smallpox, diphtheria, relapsing fever, typhoid, and typhus. Wounded soldiers from the battle-line and sick soldiers from the barracks were tottering into the tobacco warehouses, fifty, one hundred, and as high as two hundred and fifty a day.

"It was into this avalanche of disease and suffering that our six surgeons and twelve nurses entered without question or thought of themselves. The conditions of that pest-camp can not be told, but this can—that none of those twelve women and six men faltered or turned back. With a laugh that was nearer a sob, they rolled up their sleeves and bent to their task, making a hospital out of nothing, classifying the unclassable, sawing up boxes for splints, stoking old rusty boilers to secure hot water, performing miracles in the way of operations and cures.

"They were engulfed; they were overwhelmed; Every nurse became a 'lady of the lamp.' They were cooks, sisters, ministering angels, priests, undertakers. Mohammedans, unused to honesty or sympathy in women, reached out feeble hands to touch their garments. Soldiers cut off their prized buttons and officers their stars and chevrons that they might press them into the band that cooled their brow and dressed the grievous wound. Our girls did not become callous in the presence of suffering or rebellious and hard amidst this scourge of death. They had come not to question, but to help—not to be ministered unto, but to minister. And they did—they and their brothers, the doctors, who fought with them and for them, through it all, until an unseen hand reached up and drew them down, one by one, beside their patients. It was not the work and the overwork that did this, but the dread typhus, a disease that carries off half its victims and is spread by the ever-present body vermin. It was introduced by 60,000 Austrian prisoners scattered over Serbia, one-half of whom died with it. Dr. Lane was the first of the staff to go down, then Dr. King. Ten of the twelve nurses followed and five of the six physicians."

LEONARDO DA VINCI NOT A TEUTON

THE world thinks of Leonardo da Vinci only as a great painter, but he was an inventor as well. In the latter part of the fifteenth century his versatile genius included skill as a scientist, engineer, mechanician and architect, as well as a painter and musician, and his imagination led to the design of many remarkable implements of war, among which was a steam gun which was run by boiling water. In this invention, incidentally, it is said he antedated the steam engine.

In certain of his works he told of several forms of bombarding engines, one of which threw minute particles, like a storm of hail, producing quantities of dense smoke to frighten the enemy. Among his papers are found what may be called the ancestors of the terrible cannon for throwing burning liquid at a great distance, which the Krupp and Essen factories are said to have turned out. "There will be issue from the earth," he wrote, "that which, with frightful sounds, will deafen the surrounding and with its breath will kill men and ruin cities and fortresses." He suggested the use of a powder which would stunt and suffocate the enemy, and at the same time suggested a remedy. "To send poison in powder," he said, "be careful to have a wind which will not send the powder upon yourself, or have the nose and mouth covered by a thin wet cloth, so that the powder cannot pass."

He left sketches of mortars and other heavy engines of war which suggest the modern heavy and quick-firing guns, and seemed even to have imagined a submarine and aeroplane. Of the former, he wrote, according to quotations given in Italian papers, "I do not publish or divulge my way of staying under water because of the bad nature of men, who would use it for assassination under the sea, by ripping open the bottoms of ships."

GAZETTE PLEASE COPY

UNDER the department head, "Voice of the State Press," the Reno Gazette republishes paragraph editorials from the other Nevada papers. The Bonanza is peeved that it has been overlooked for several days, but on glancing over the file the cause is apparent, our emanations have lately been too long-winded. This ought to be about the right length for Cannon's shears.

MARS AND MARRIAGE.

Wedded-Life in the United States Army and Navy.

"Cupid doesn't let the fortune of the Newport girl or the lack of fortune of the Cheyenne girl interfere with his arrangements when he gets his strategy disposed planned and his forces mobilized," writes Judson C. Welliver in Munsey's Magazine. The subject of the article is marriage in the American army and navy, and he argues that as a rule the officers of these services marry young and happily.

"Be it Bar Harbor or Long Beach, Portland or Panama, east or west, north or south, your young man in the blue and gold is accounted to take care of himself socially. The uniform undoubtedly helps. But it does more than add a touch of color to the social and escape whereon it disports. It is a prima facie guarantee that a young man with a well trained brain, a sound body, a disciplined mind, clean, wholesome and ambitious, is inside.

"The uniform wouldn't be there if it were not a testimonial about that table of contents. The drawing room arts, the social refinements, the hall-room accomplishments are added unto all this because they have been a part of the atmosphere, the training, the bringing up in those two splendid institutions that prepare young men to wear Uncle Sam's livery.

"The navy men may not take their wives with them to sea under any possible pretext. If there is enough of family income to permit the wife may, and not infrequently does, parallel the voyagings of her husband. To the Philippines the government permits wives of navy officers to travel on the transports at cost of subsistence, which is very modest.

"At each army post houses are provided for the married officers, and Uncle Sam also furnishes light and fuel. In these respects the army officer has the better of his brother in the navy. On the other hand, he must pay for household supplies and service of all kinds, while the naval officer is a member of his mess and gets the best of living on shipboard at marvellously cheap rates.

"Army and navy officers as a rule marry young, and as a rule the marriages are happy. The reasons are obvious. At least the economic reasons are. The others lie in that traditional fascination which uniforms and gold trappings have for the feminine heart."

IT WAS VERY CURIOUS.

When the Whistle Test Failed All the Surgeons Were Puzzled.

A Parisian journal tells a little story of a young Parisian who in civil life had long worn a monocle in his left eye and had continued the habit as an officer. He had been wounded, was cured and asked to be returned to the front. He was to be examined and concealed the monocle, thinking he might be charged with myopia in one eye. When the chief surgeon examined him, after looking well over his face, he said sharply, "Whistle!"

"This is curious," said the surgeon, and, calling a young assistant, he said again to the soldier, "Whistle!" He whistled again. "That is curious," said the young assistant.

Another surgeon entered, and the patient was called upon for the third time to whistle.

"Ah," said the surgeon, "this is curious."

"But," expostulated the soldier, "I don't see why there is so much of this. I'm not to serve as a locomotive."

"It is all right," said the chief surgeon. "You may return to the front."

When the soldier arrived at his regiment he gave to the regimental surgeon the note that had been given him by the examiner. This surgeon said in his turn, "Will you please whistle?" He whistled. "This is curious," said the surgeon.

It seems that when a man wears a monocle it gives to the face the appearance of facial paralysis. The operation of whistling is a test. The facial paralytic cannot whistle.

Hashish.

There was a terrible secret society in the east which was organized for wholesale and systematic murder. Its members called themselves "Hashishis"—whence, by the way, came our word "assassin"—and used to get up courage for their deeds of atrocity by doses of the drug called hashish. This is obtained from Indian hemp, and it is from the seed vessels that the substance is taken which yields the poison so famed in history and romance. It is a vivid green and when taken produces the most extraordinary visions and hallucinations.

SONS AMERICAN REVOLUTION MEET

TO FRESHEN MEMORIES OF FIRST WAR

WILL ENDEAVOR TO OBTAIN A PERMANENT HALL OF RECORDS APPROPRIATION

(By Associated Press.)

PORTLAND, Ore., July 19.—From every state, from Hawaii and the Philippines, delegates to the 26th annual convention of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution assembled here today representing 14,000 descendants of participants in that nation-making struggle. The last actual participant who is of record died in 1869 and it is estimated that not more than thirty sons of revolutionary soldiers are living now, but each year their descendants meet to freshen memories of Valley Forge and Yorktown and sow seeds of patriotism in the heart of young America.

President General R. C. Ballard Thruston of Louisville, Ky., in his opening address emphasized the need of a hall of archives at Washington. The records of the revolution, as well as other government documents, he said, are stored in garrets, cellars and other undesirable places exposed to deterioration and destruction and inaccessible even to officials of the government. "We don't know what they show as to the history of our government," he declared.

A committee of the Sons of the Revolution will work during the coming session of Congress at Washington with the American Historical association to get appropriations for a permanent hall of records.
